Golden West: Book 1 J.R. Murdock

Abigail's life is disrupted when her father announces they'll be moving across the country from New York to California. His new job requires them to move their lives across 1885 America where the transcontinental railroad has yet to be completed. Instead of building locomotives, he'll be building a new machine to mine for gold.

On their way, their path is disrupted several times. A man that worked with her father keeps appearing and disappearing, telling her that she must stop her father from going to California. It's not gold they're looking for.

After purchasing a vehicle to travel on and befriending a giant in the mid-west, their trip becomes far more difficult. Now they must fend for themselves in the wild American West to complete their trip.
