Boys Don't Cry R.L. Brown

Richard, and his older cousin Christopher, both have an early appreciation for the lakes and woods near their upstate New York home. With Mother Nature as his teacher and his favorite lake as his classroom, the younger boy, Richard, will learn various life lessons from his day on the lake fishing with his cousin.

In an unconventional way and in an idyllic setting, Richard is taught tough lessons in patience, perseverance, and resiliency. However, the toughest lesson learned by Richard that day is, "Boys don't cry".
